

Learn and Profit from Directional Options Strategies

Directional options trading is used to capitalize on a move higher or lower in the broad market or a particular stock.

Using technical analysis and options uses the leverage of options intelligently.

In this short course, we will describe and review how to use calls and puts for Day or Swing trades.

Directional trades using long calls or long puts offer you the chance to profit if you're right about the direction of the underlying stock.

But, having profits that aren't capped often comes at a price— not only does the stock need to move in the right direction, it has to move enough to overcome the premium paid for the option.

Buying and selling options using Master Trader Technical Strategies (MTS) provides excellent opportunities to generate regular weekly income.

And, Buying call and put options have limited risk and can provide huge returns when used properly with the charts.

We are going to teach you how to swing and day trade options as directional trades using Master Trader compelling trade setups.

Learn our approach on how to intelligently trade stocks and options on the best setups.

Learn:

- The benefits of buying and selling call and put options over trading stocks
- How to time entry of buying options using Master Trader's compelling technical patterns using Multiple Time Frames (MTF) to perfect entry
- How to select the best strike price and expiration for the pattern bias for maximum returns
- Watch us scan for new trade setups and discuss what to look for in directional option trade setups on different time frames
